DETAILS

On May 9, 2018, I conducted a phone interview of [REDACTED] of Bainbridge Island, Washington, regarding an alleged net pen failure in May of 2017. After being notified of the identity of the interviewing agent and the nature of the interview, [REDACTED] in substance, provided the following information:

BACKGROUND:

[REDACTED]

INCIDENT:

On May 25, 2017 in the evening at approximately 5:30 PM, [REDACTED] and she were about to leave their home, when they noticed there was a flagger on their road and very large flat-bed truck with a lot of equipment on it. She thought that this was unusual during the evening and stopped to speak with the person doing the flagging.

The unknown Cooke worker stated, in substance, "he was sorry, but the company net pen had an equipment failure." She noticed that the net pen had a large vessel pressed up against the Clam Bay net pen. She recognized this as Cooke's vessel "Elsie." The Elsie was a working boat with a crane on top.

On May 28, 2017, she spoke with [REDACTED] for the area net pens. [REDACTED] has been employed there for an extended period of time and she knows [REDACTED] from her interactions with the net pen personnel. [REDACTED] explained to her that the net pen had an anchor “slip” or break, but that no fish escaped the net pen. [REDACTED] explained to her that the Elsie held the net pen together until equipment arrived and the net pen was repaired. She is aware that Cooke did not report this incident to the Washington Department of Natural Resources. She believes that [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

She believes that the Clam Bay net pen is a problem area and she has reported several issues such as workers changing oil on the decks, power washing decks over the water and washing skiffs off over the water to the Washington Department of Ecology.

She has some pictures of the equipment on the day of the incident that she is willing to share with the investigation.
